¿Qué te gusta para el desayuno? (What "do you like" for breakfast?)

First, answer the following questions in English:

1. When do you eat breakfast during the week/on the weekend?
2. What do you usually have for breakfast?
3. How would you describe a typical breakfast in North America?

Next, read the two paragraphs below:

In Mexico

El desayuno (breakfast) is eaten at the time of the morning most convenient for the individual. It is never a heavy meal. They might have pan (bread) or rolls with mantequilla (butter) or mermelada (jam) and café con leche (coffee with milk), chocolate (hot chocolate) or atole (hot cornmeal drink). Note that café con leche is not coffee with a few drops of milk. It is usually la mitad (half) coffee and half milk that is caliente (hot). Azúcar (sugar) is generally added. Sometimes, almuerzo (a late breakfast/lunch) may be eaten in the late morning. Fruta (fruit), jugo (juice), huevos (eggs), frijoles (beans), salsa (sauce), and tortillas may be part of the almuerzo.

In Spain

Breakfast in Spain consists of coffee with hot milk with un panecillo (roll), croissant, brioche, pan dulce (sweet breads) or pan tostado (toast) with butter and/or jam. Sometimes Spanish people like to beber (to drink) hot chocolate instead of coffee. El desayuno is a quick meal that often lasts unos minutos (a few minutes). In fact, many Spaniards like to comer (to eat) their breakfast while standing at the counter in a cafetería (café), pastelería (pastry shop), or restaurante (restaurant).

Finally, answer questions 4, 5, 6 & 7:

4. How do you say breakfast in Spanish?
5. What is almuerzo and when is it eaten?
6. Describe a typical Mexican/Spanish breakfast.
7. Is breakfast in the Spanish-speaking world more alike or different than our breakfast?
